Revolabs Opens Operations in Hong Kong and Hires Seasoned Executive to Run Sales in Asia Pacific

MAYNARD, Mass., Feb. 20, 2008 -- Revolabs, the leading provider of wireless audio products for enhancing collaboration, today announced the opening of its Hong Kong office to support sales throughout the Asia Pacific region, and the appointment of Simon Chin as the new vice president of APAC sales. Mr. Chin will be responsible for overseeing and managing sales activities including partner recruitment throughout Asia. He will report directly to Revolabs COO, JP Carney.

Mr. Chin has more than 16 years of experience recruiting channel partners and increasing revenue and market share for ClearOne and First Virtual Communications in the Asian Pacific region. Under his leadership, both companies became leading providers to large enterprise, government, banking, and education entities, as well as many small and medium companies throughout the region.

“I am very excited to join Revolabs as it expands globally,” said Simon Chin, Revolabs managing director for Asia Pacific. “The demand for audio and video-conferencing equipment in APAC is growing rapidly and the Revolabs product line is the perfect complement to what is currently marketed there. I am confident that the solutions will be well received.”

“We are extremely pleased to welcome Simon to the Revolabs team and excited to open a base of operations in Hong Kong, especially as it comes on the heels of the announcement that we have expanded our EMEA network of distributors,” said JP Carney, COO of Revolabs.

“Revolabs is seeing tremendous demand for our wireless audio products outside the U.S. and Simon’s impressive background and key contacts will help propagate the Revolabs product line in the Asian Pacific region as well.”
