Revolabs Expands Distribution with CDW Sales Channel Partnership makes it easier for organizations to purchase audio solutions

LAS VEGAS, June 18, 2008 -- Revolabs, the leading provider of wireless audio products for enhancing collaboration, today at InfoComm 2008, announced that CDW Corporation will market and distribute its products throughout North America. CDW is a leading provider of technology products and services to businesses, governments and educational institutions. The new relationship ensures that these organizations will have greater access to the Revolabs Wireless Microphone product family.

Revolabs' newly released Fusion™ Wireless Microphone System is one of the primary Revolabs' solutions sold through CDW. Fusion is an all-in-one wireless microphone system designed for use in small conference rooms. The new product combines all of the necessary electronics in one small, stylish, enclosure and makes it extremely simple to provide great audio for audio-and video-conferencing systems. The entire Revolabs' wireless microphone product line is a natural fit with the CDW initiative to support customers with telecommuting employees. According to a 2008 CDW Telework Report, which surveyed more than 1,800 federal and corporate workers and the IT professionals that support them, "employers have taken significant steps to expand telecommuting initiatives since a year ago."

"Our agreement with CDW will expand our product reach tremendously," said Gregory Shalov, vice president of North American sales. "Our wireless microphone products are specifically designed for the conferencing marketplace, from the board room to the personal computer desktop. CDW has years of proven success assisting customers with their technology needs, and we look forward to working together to enhance collaboration within the corporate, government and educational marketplaces."

"At CDW we have built our reputation by delivering innovative, high quality products and solutions to our customers," said Jessica Breich, category manager of product and partner management "We remain focused on that mission and are happy to welcome the Revolabs' family of audio solutions to our portfolio of conferencing products."
